PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

Petitioners pray that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit entered in the above case on May 21, 1979.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit is reported in 598 F.2d 1339.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of West Virginia was made and entered on September 15, 1977, the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit was made and entered on May 21, 1979, and the final order of the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit denying petitioners' motion for rehearing was made and entered on July 12, 1979. Copies of the foregoing are appended to this petition in the Appendix at pp 11a, 1a-10a, and 11a.

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether petitioners are entitled to a jury trial on the issue of what constitutes a reasonable or unreasonable exercise of respondent's oil and gas rights under the Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution?

2. Whether it is abuse of discretion for the federal circuit court to decline to certify unsettled or disputed questions of state law to the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, pursuant to the Uniform Certification of Questions of Law Act; Chapter 51, Article 1A, West Virginia Code, as amended, which questions the federal circuit court held determinative of issues before that court?

3. Whether there was sufficient proof of damages done to petitioners' land by respondent to enable the jury to fix the amount thereof with reason, or, conversely, where there is certainty of proof that damage was done to petitioners' land by respondent, can any possible uncertainty as to the dollar amount thereof preclude the right of recovery or prevent a jury award?

4. If this Honorable Court should resolve the foregoing against petitioners, whether, in the retrial of this case, the petitioners are entitled to the protection of the restrictive land use covenants in the lease from petitioners' grantor to respondent's predecessor in interest or, conversely, whether respondent is bound by such covenants, in measuring the respective rights of the parties to this litigation?

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND STATUTES INVOLVED

The pertinent portions of the Seventh Amendment of the United States Constitution and the Uniform Certification of Questions of Law Act, Chapter 51, Article 1A, Code of West Virginia, as amended, are set forth in the Appendix at pp 13a and 14a.

STATEMENT

This action arises out of injuries suffered by petitioners caused by the careless and negligent drilling operations conducted on their land by respondent PennzoiI Company.

Respondent's right to drill for oil stems from a lease agreement entered into in 1904. The lease contained restrictive covenants relating to the exercise of such right, i.e., location of wells, protection of cultivated areas of the land, placement and burial of gas lines and free gas for the lessor which covenants were partly or wholly violated by the respondent. The lessee drilled one (1) well in 1915 and four (4) wells in 1974. The drilling methods used in 1974, and which are the subject of petitioners' complaint, were radically different from the drilling methods used in 1904, the former necessitating commitment of substantially more land for each well site and maintenance (approximately 60,000 square feet) than the latter (approximately 4800 square feet).

Notwithstanding the covenant contained in their lease reserving "from the leased land 300 feet around the buildings on which no well shall be drilled" respondent has drilled a well within two hundred two feet (202') of one of petitioner's residence and one hundred ten feet (110') from petitioner's cellar house. Respondent's storage tank or rather one (1) of its storage tanks and other facilities are located in cultivated areas of petitioners' land notwithstanding the lease covenant which prohibits it. Unnecessary roadways have been built, ditches have been omitted, streams have been filled with sediment and the surface of the subject land has been squandered by respondent's wasteful land use practices. Another roadway has effectively channeled runoff water into petitioners' streams and into their cellar house. Respondent cleared an excessive amount of timber from petitioners' land and has rendered said timber valueless. Respondent's blasting has caused damage to petitioners' residence and in addition has scattered large amounts of debris over petitioner's land. Salt water has been permitted to flow over petitioners' land.

Judgment against respondent and for petitioners was obtained in the United States District Court for the Southern District of West Virginia on September 15, 1977, after a jury trial. Respondent's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or, in the alternative, to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial was denied by order entered November 11, 1977.

Respondent appealed certain rulings of the District Court to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. By opinion dated May 21, 1979, the Circuit Court reversed the jury verdict and remanded the case for further proceedings (new trial) to the District Court. Petitioners sought rehearing by the Circuit Court but, by order entered July 12, 1979, were denied. (appendix at pp 1a-10a and p. 11a) the District Court bound by the state rule of Adkins v. United Fuel Gas, 134 W. Va. 719, 61 S.E. 2d 633 (1950). This case, as interpreted by the Circuit Court held that the issue of unreasonable use is one to be determined by the Court and not by a jury. At page ten (10) of its opinion, the Circuit Court also concluded that petitioners were not entitled to the protection of those provisions or covenants in respondent's lease relating to protection of the surface estate. Furthermore, the Circuit Court ruled that the monetary value of petitioners' injuries must be proven with specificity in addition to proof of damage.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

There are serious questions of public policy involved here as to the comparative rights of differing landed interests and the preservation of the land itself which make this case a peculiarly appropriate one for the exercise of this Court's jurisdiction. The Circuit Court has erred in creating an exception to the rule enunicated in Byrd v. Blue Ridge Rural Electric Cooperative, Inc. 356 U.S. 525, 78 S.Ct. 893, 2 L. Ed. 2d 953 (1958). To permit the decision of the Circuit Court to stand will cause uncertainty where there has been relative certainty since the Byrd decision was announced in 1958.

1. The decision of the Court below should be reviewed because it is in direct conflict with prior decisions arising out of this and other circuits on the issue of (a) whether or not reasonable land use is a factual question for jury determination, and (b) whether such issue can be withheld from a jury by application of state law in contravention of the Seventh Amendment.

If the decision of the Court below is permitted to stand, the constitutionally correct procedure in federal courts for resolving land use issues will be hopelessly confused. States may be permitted to remove all issues relating to what is reasonable land use from jury consideration by simply declaring such issues to be nonfactual, thereby effectively limiting the application of the Seventh Amendment.

Assuming without conceding that West Virginia Law dictates the procedure gleaned by the Court below from Adkins v. United Fuel Gas Co., 134 W.Va. 719, 61 S.E.2d 63 (1950), and that such procedure requires the Court rather than the jury to decide the question of reasonable use, then and in such event, state law is patently in conflict with federal law as enunciated in Byrd, supra; Denneny v. Siegel, 407 F.2d 433 (1969), and a host of federal court cases. The Circuit Court cites Byrd, supra, and then seeks to interpret it to support reversal of the District Court judgment based, as it was, upon jury determination of all factual issues. This cannot rationally be done.

Byrd clearly affirms the right to a jury determination of factual issues . . . "in accordance with federal practice, notwithstanding state practice . . . . Federal Court, in a diversity case, is not bound, under the rule of Erie v. Tompkins, supra, to follow the state practice which might point to a different result." Byrd, supra.

The Adkins case has been treated by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit exactly as it treated Byrd. It has divested the jury of its normal functions. However, the Supreme Court in Byrd flatly denied the validity of that position, and the same result should obtain in the case at bar.

"The federal system is an independent system for administering justice to litigants who properly invoke its jurisdiction. An essential characteristic of that system is the manner in which, in civil common law actions, it distributes trial functions between judge and jury and, under the influence—if not command—of the Seventh Amendment, assigns the decisions of disputed questions of fact to the jury." Byrd, supra.

"It cannot be gainsaid that there is a strong federal policy against allowing state rules to disrupt the judge-jury relationship in the federal courts . . . . In light of the Seventh Amendment, the function assigned to the jury is an essential factor in the process for which the Federal Constitution provides." Byrd, supra.

The Court below appears to misunderstand the opinion of the Court in Byrd delivered by Mr. Justice Brennan, and, worse yet, employs the dissenting rationale of Mr. Justice Whittaker to reach an opposite result from that which is reached by the Supreme Court.

The doctrine laid down in Byrd has been followed in a number of subsequent cases, including Denneny, supra, wherein the Court held in principle part as follows, "This latter proposition—that federal law governs the judge-jury relationship in diversity actions was confirmed by the Supreme Court in Byrd, supra . . . (which) made it clear that state law could not contravene the federal rule that only the jury may resolve disputed questions of fact."

There can be little doubt that the rule in Byrd, properly applied, amply demonstrates the correctness of the District Court's action and the incorrectness, indeed the unconstitutionality, of the Circuit Court decision.

Nor can the tortured, bifurcated court-to-court, jury-to-court, and court-back-to-jury procedure, directed by the Court below presumably following the Adkins formula (Appendix at ap. 5a), be justified on the grounds that the issue of unreasonable use is not a factual issue. The issue of reasonable use or necessity is clearly factual under prevailing West Virginia and U. S. Fourth Circuit law. Mullins v. Beatrice Pocahontas Company, 432 F.2d 314 (4th Cir., 1970); Johnson v. Junior Pocahontas Coal Co., Inc., ____W. Va.____, 234 S.E. 2d 309 (1977).

Furthermore, if the "nature and extent" of the damage done to petitioners' land is a factual issue to be left to the jury (Appendix at pp. 5a and 10a) surely the question of reasonableness is inextricably bound up in that issue. Otherwise, the jury's finding on "nature and extent" is virtually meaningless. To circumvent Byrd and Denneny and the Seventh Amendment, one need only take a truly factual question, such as the extent of respondent's unreasonable use, and call it a legal issue. Application of the reasonable land use standard, like application of the reasonable man standard, is indubitably a jury function. The reasonable man standard occurs ubiquitously throughout the case law and is invariably applied by the jury, and not by the Court.

2. The West Virginia Uniform Certification of Questions of Law Act, Chapter 51, Article 1A, West Virginia Code, as amended, provides for the consideration by the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, on certification by a federal court, of any question of substantive law wherein West Virginia law governs. If the question of reasonable use is construed as a substantive matter and thus governed by state law, then prevailing state law must first be enunciated by the State Supreme Court of Appeals, and it should not be left to the federal court to determine whether Adkins or the leading cases of Mullins or Johnson apply.

The action of the Court below in applying Adkins rather than Mullins to the facts of this case, without first seeking clarification or resolution of the obvious conflict between these cases, deserves to be reviewed. The Court of Appeals, in petitioners' view, has reversed state law on a subject which that same Court views as the province of the state. In the process, the rights of owners of mineral estates have been greatly and unjustifiably enhanced at the expense of the surface owners.

3. The Circuit Court's second ground for reversal of the District Court judgment involved the jury's right to assess the quantum of petitioners' damages in the light of "a great deal of evidence concerning the damage done to their land" (Appendix at p. 6a) but insufficient evidence as to the monetary value of that damage. The Circuit Court's position in this regard is contrary to the weight of authority. The Court below relies upon Jarrett v. E. L. Harper & Son, Inc., ____W.Va.____, 253 S.E. 2d 362 (1977), which does not relate to the precise issue raised in the case at bar, but which simply overrules cases that distinguish between temporary and permanent damages to real property, and approves new elements thereof such as annoyance and inconvenience.

The fundamental principle which is overlooked by the Court below is that "there must be a minimum of interference with the jury . . . . Traditional respect for the jury and its constitutional benison requires that it be allowed to find whatever facts are reasonably suggested by the evidence." Wright and Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure; Civil Sec. 9-35, p. 545.

There is a distinction between the quality of proof necessary to establish the fact that the petitioners sustained some damage and the measure of proof necessary to enable the jury to fix the amount. Although formerly the tendency was to restrict the recovery to such matters as were susceptible of having attached to them an exact pecuniary value, it is now generally held that the uncertainty which prevents a recovery is uncertainty as to the fact of the damage and not as to its amount, and that where it is reasonably certain that damage has resulted, mere uncertainty as to the amount itself will not preclude the right of recovery nor prevent a jury decision awarding damages. Bigelow v. RKP Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U. S. 251, 66 S.Ct. 574, 90 L.Ed. 652; Anderson v. Mt. Clemens Pottery Co., 328 U. S. 680, 66 S.Ct. 1187, 90 L.Ed. 1515; Chesapeake & P. Tel. Co. v. Carless, 127 Va. 5, 102 S.E. 569, 23 A.L.R. 943 (1920); Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 51 S.Ct. 2d 248, 75 L.Ed. 544; Worrie v. Boze, 198 Va. 533, 95 S.E.2d 192, 62 A.L.R. 2d 1315. The modest verdict returned by the jury in the case at bar is amply supported by the evidence.

4. Should this Honorable Court decline to grant the writ sought by your petitioners on the foregoing grounds, then and in that event, your petitioners urge your Honors to address the reversible error committed both by the District Court and the Circuit Court regarding an instruction to the jury on the application of certain covenants in the lease under which respondent obtained their property rights.

According to the Court below, "there was a great deal of evidence to show that Pennzoil . . . violated the terms of its oil and gas lease." However, since petitioners "were not parties to the lease and had no interest therein," they were not entitled to the protection afforded by its provisions.

In 1904, A. E. Robertson, the original fee simple owner of the land in question, leased the oil and gas interests therein to the respondent's predecessor in interest. The relevant covenants in the Robertson lease (see Appendix at pp 14a-17a) are as follows:

(a) A lease is granted hereunder "for the sole and only purpose of mining and operating for oil and gas, and of laying pipe lines, and of building tanks, stations and structures thereon to take care of the said products . . . ."

(b) There is reserved from the leased land "300 feet around the buildings on which no well shall be drilled. . . ."

(c) The party of the second part (lessee) "covenants and agrees to locate all wells so as to interfere as little as possible with the cultivated portions of the farm, to bury gas lines two feet below the surface when notified to do so, and pay all damages to growing crops by reason of operations."

In 1920, Robertson conveyed the surface of his land and all minerals other than the oil and gas to the petitioners' predecessor in interest while reserving only the oil and gas (previously leased to the respondent's predecessor).

From these facts the Court below discerned that the intent of the parties to the original lease (Robertson and respondent's predecessor) was that reasonable use of the surface at the time required compliance with the lease conditions and covenants cited above, but that reasonable use of the surface in the future would not so require.

The Circuit Court's reasoning does not comport with West Virginia law which says that where a covenant is of such character that the benefits and burdens pass with the land to the assignee, into whatsoever hands the land may come, the covenant is said to run with the land. Hurxthal v. Boom Co., 53 W.Va. 87, 44 S.E. 520 (1903). If some interest in the land is granted (leased) and the grantee (lessee) covenants that he will do an act which concerns the land and which thus becomes united to it so that it affects the value of the land in whosoever hands it may come, such covenant runs with the land. Lydick v. B & O R.R. 17 W. Va. 427, (1880) 5A M.J., Covenants, § 12.

The general rule is that oil and gas leases will be construed liberally in favor of the lessor and strictly against the lessee. Martin v. Consolidated Coal Corp., 101 W. Va. 721, 133 S.E. 626 (1926); Jackson v. Kent, 106 W. Va. 37; Eclipse Oil Co. v. South Penn Oil Co., 47 W. Va. 84, 34 S.E. 923 (1899); Yoke v. Shay, 47 W. Va. 40, 34 S.E. 748 (1899); Cotiga Dev. Co. v. Gas Co., 147 W. Va. 484, 2d 626 (1962).

A covenant to bury pipelines . . . touches and concerns the land and therefore both right and duty should run to the successive owners of the surface and mineral estates. Both the benefit and burden of such covenants are capable of running with the lease and with the reversion. Mobile Oil Corp. v. Brennan 385 F.2d 951, 270 & GR 656, 659 (5th Cir., 1967); Kuntz, Law of Oil and Gas (1972).

. . . The benefit of the covenant runs with the estate intended to be benefited. By application of that principle, the benefit of the covenant in a surface damage clause and the benefit of a covenant to bury pipelines below plow depth run with the surface estate and will continue to run until expressly removed by a later conveyance. Similarly, a clause restricting well location by prohibiting drilling within 300 feet of a residence was held to be for the benefit of persons owning interests within the prohibited area. Hart v. Sinclair Oil & Gas Co., 351 S.W.2d 142, (Tex. Cir. App. 1961); Manges v. Gulf Oil Corp., 394 F.2d 487 (5th Cir. '68); Mobil Oil Corp. v. Brennan, supra; McFarlane v. Gulf Prod. Co., 204 S.W. 460 (Tex. Cir. App. 1918).

Benefits (oil and gas rights), as well as burdens and conditions for the receipt of those benefits, were granted to the respondent's predecessor under the same instrument. The defendant should not be allowed to claim the benefits of that grant while rejecting the burdens therof, notwithstanding the ruling to the contrary of the Court below. Cummings v. United Fuel Gas Company, 116 W.Va. 599, 182 S.E. 789 (1935).

CONCLUSION

It is petitioner's position that the opinion of the Court below conflicts with established West Virginia law as well as the federal rule and is plainly unconstitutional. The Circuit Court opinion ignores the command of the Seventh Amendment, i.e., that it is the province of the jury to decide factual issues such as what is the reasonable exercise of certain property rights and to assess damages for the unreasonable exercise of such rights. It places landowners, large and small, at the mercy of over-aggressive mineral extractors. Indeed the decision of the Court below, if allowed to stand, not only removes certain factual questions from juries, it also tends to attach rights to servient property interests to which dominent landowners become captive, and render surface owners everywhere virtually helpless to protect themselves against the abuse of their land by rapacious mineral interests.

For the reasons set forth above, it is respectfully submitted that the petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF WEST VIRGINIA, AT HUNTINGTON. CHARLES H. HADEN, II, DISTRICT JUDGE.

Argued: February 6, 1979 Decided: May 21, 1979

Before BRYAN, Senior Circuit Judge, RUSSELL and HALL, Circuit Judges.

Fred L. Davis, Jr. (William A. Trainer, Davis, Davis, Hall & Clovis on brief) for Appellant; Ray E. Ratliff, Jr. (Paul J. Kaufman, Kaufman and Ratliff on brief) for Appellees.

HALL, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs, owners of the surface rights to certain land situate in Lincoln County, West Virginia, brought suit in state court against defendant Pennzoil Company, the lessee of oil and gas rights in the land, alleging that Pennzoil had unreasonably and negligently damaged the surface incident to its drilling of several oil wells. Defendant removed the case to federal district court on grounds of diversity. 28 U.S.C. §1441(a). After several years of pretrial manuevering and an eleventh-hour demand by plaintiffs for jury trial,[1] the case came on for trial. The district court, disagreeing with defendant's contention that under the substantive law of West Virginia the issue of unreasonable use is one to be determined by the Judge, submitted the issue to the jury. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs and awarded damages in the amount of $10,000. Defendant appeals certain rulings of the district court. We reverse.

The land in question was originally owned in fee simple by A. E. Robertson. In 1904 Robertson executed an oil and gas lease to the Holly Oil Company, Pennzoil's predecessor in interest. In 1920 Robertson sold the land to B. P. McKinney, from whom these plaintiffs have acquired their interests by inheritance or devise. The 1920 deed contained the following reservation:

> ". . . the Parties of the first part [Robertson] does hereby reserve the Oil & Gass & right to operate same except Gass for domestic use as is set forth in leese."

The record is silent as to whether A. E. Robertson is presently alive and, if he is not, to whom he devised or conveyed the oil and gas. Therefore the division of rights in the land is as follows: (1) the surface and all minerals other than oil and gas are owned by the plaintiffs, taking through B. P. McKinney, (2) the oil and gas are owned and leased to Pennzoil by A. E. Robertson or by unnamed parties taking through Robertson, and (3) Pennzoil is the lessee of oil and gas rights under the lease, taking through Holly Oil Company.

[1]/The complaint was filed on March 11, 1975, and demand for jury trial was made on June 23, 1977.

First. The controlling issue in this litigation is whether Pennzoil, in its drilling operations, exceeded its common law right "to use the surface in such manner and with such means as would be fairly necessary for the enjoyment of the mineral estate." Squires v. Lafferty, 95 W. Va. 307, 121 S.E. 90 (1924). The West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals has held that the issue of unreasonable use is one to be determined by the Court.

> "[W]e do not think that whether the plaintiff's rights have been invaded, or whether the defendant has exceeded its rights are questions of fact for determination of the jury. In a case where there is a dispute of fact, the jury should find the facts, and from such finding of facts by the jury it is the duty of the court to determine whether the use of the surface by the owner of the minerals has exceeded the fairly necessary use thereof, and whether the owner of the minerals has invaded the rights of the surface owner, and thus exceeded the rights possessed by the owner of such minerals."

It has been held that federal rules usually control the allocation of function between judge and jury in diversity

[2]/Most severance of minerals from the surface of land in West Virginia was effected several generations ago. Property owners have since learned, often in court, that their surface ownership gives them "no right to prevent such use of the surface as [is] reasonable and necessary for the production and transportation of gas," even if the surface is damaged thereby. Porter v. Mack Mfg. Co., 65 W. Va. 636, 64 S.E. 853 (1909).

cases. Byrd v. Blue Ridge Rural Electric Co-operative, Inc., 356 U.S. 525, 533-40 (1958). See also Wratchford v. S. J. Groves § Sons Co., 405 F.2d 1061, 1065-66 (4th Cir. 1969). We think, however, that in a real property case arising under West Virginia law the rule of Adkins is binding on a federal court sitting in diversity. We perceive no conflict with the Supreme Court's decision in Byrd.

In Byrd, the Court had before it a negligence action brought against an electric power company by the employee of a construction contractor. The employee had been injured while connecting power lines to one of defendant's substations.

Jurisdiction was based on diversity of citizenship, and South Carolina law controlled the litigation. One affirmative defense raised was that the claim was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the state's Workmen's Compensation Act. The validity of this defense turned on disputed issues of fact. Under South Carolina law, the factual issues were to be decided by the judge rather than the jury. The Supreme Court rejected defendant/respondant's argument that this rule was binding on a diversity court under Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938), holding that

> "[a]n essential characteristic of [the federal] system is the manner in which, in civil common-law actions, it distributes trial functions between judge and jury and, under the influence—if not the command—of the Seventh Amendment, assigns the decisions of disputed questions of fact to the jury."

Byrd v. Blue Ridge Rural Electric Cooperative, Inc., 356 U.S. at 537 (emphasis added and citations omitted).

The Court noted that the state rule was grounded merely in habit, since under past practice the issue of whether an employee was covered under Workmen's Compensation had usually come before the state court on appeal from a decision of South Carolina's Industrial Commission. The rule reflected, at most, "a policy that administrative determination of 'jurisdictional facts' should not be final but subject to judicial review." Id. at 536 (citations omitted). The Court found no indication that the rule was "intended to be bound up with the definition of the rights and obligations of the parties." Id. Therefore, it was "merely a form and mode of enforcing [the jurisdictional defense]," id., and under these circumstances, the strong federal policy of allowing the jury to determine disputed issues of fact was held paramount to the state rule.

In contrast, the rule articulated in Adkins v. United Fuel Gas Co., supra, is one of state property law. Unreasonable use of land by a mineral owner is not measured by the tort standard of the ordinary reasonable man; rather, it is measured by concrete legal standards rooted in the common law. See Adkins v. United Fuel Gas Co., 61 S.E.2d at 635-36 and cases discussed therein. It is not a matter readily susceptible of jury determination. The rule of Adkins is not only bound up with but assures the continuity of those substantive rights and obligations of the parties which were defined generations ago. Compare Wratchford v. S. J. Groves & Sons Co., 405 F.2d at 1065-66.

Most importantly, under Adkins disputed issues of fact are not assigned to the judge. All factual issues are resolved by the jury, and the ultimate question of property law is then decided by the judge on the basis of the jury's findings. See p. 8 infra. We think this allocation of judge/jury functions comports with the considerations discussed in Byrd v. Blue Ridge Rural Electric Coopera- tive, Inc., supra, and we therefore hold that the rule of Adkins is binding on a federal court sitting in diversity.

Although plaintiffs seek to distinguish Adkins on the ground that the defendant in that case was the owner of the minerals, as well as the mineral operator, we think this a distinction without a difference. Subject of course to any restrictions in the lease,[3/] the lessee/operator enjoys the same right to use the surface as does the lessor/owner, e.g., Atkinson v. Virginia Oil & Gas Co., 72 W. Va. 707, 79 S.E. 647 (1913), in order that both parties may benefit from their interests in the mineral estate.

Therefore, the district court erred in submitting the issue of unreasonable use to the jury; the jury's verdict is reversed and the case remanded for a new trial. Under Adkins, the disputed issues of fact concerning the nature and extent of the damage caused by defendant to plaintiffs' land should be submitted to the jury, perhaps on special interrogatories. The court will then determine as a matter of law whether Pennzoil has exceeded its right to fairly and reasonably use the surface for enjoyment of its mineral estate. If the court rules that Pennzoil has exceeded its right, it must delineate where unreasonable use began in order that the jury may properly assess damages.

Second. At trial, the plaintiffs put on a great deal of evidence concerning the damage done to their land. There was almost no evidence, however, reasonably specifying the cost to repair the damage or the monetary devaluation of the land, as the district court struck most of plaintiff's' expert witness testimony from the record.

It has long been the rule in West Virginia that damages cannot be based on speculation, guess or conjecture.

[3/]These restrictions may or may not inure to the benefit of the surface owner. See pp. 10-11 infra.

E.g., Spencer v. Steinbrecher, 152 W. Va. 490, 164 S.E.2d 710 (1968), citing Rogers v. Bailey, 68 W. Va. 186, 69 S.E. 698 (1910). On remand, should the district court find liability against Pennzoil, the plaintiffs must prove damages under the rule of Jarrett v. E. L. Harper & Son, Inc., 235 S.E.2d 362, 365 (W. Va. 1977).

> "When realty is injured the owner may recover the cost of repairing it plus his expenses stemming from the injury including loss of use during the repair period. If the injury cannot be repaired or the cost of repair would exceed the property's market value, then the owner may recover the money equivalent of its lost value plus his expenses resulting from the injury including loss of use during the time he has been deprived of his property. * * * [A]nnoyance and inconvenience are [also] properly considered as elements in the measure of damages that plaintiffs are entitled to recover, provided that these considerations are measured by an objective standard of ordinary persons acting reasonably under the given conditions."

(Emphasis in original)

Third. Pennzoil contends that the district court erred by refusing to instruct the jury that any damages must be specifically allocated to subdivided parcels of the land belonging to individual plaintiffs. This argument is without merit.

The issue arose when plaintiff Charles McKinney was added as a party plaintiff shortly before trial, after counsel realized that a parcel of the land had been deeded over to him by plaintiff Roma McKinney Justice. The evidence at trial indicated that this parcel, on which three of Pennzoil's five wells were located, sustained the heaviest damage. Pennzoil argues that Charles McKinney, who did not appear at trial, was apparently uninterested in the litigation, and that any award for damage to his parcel should not "fall into the hands" of other family members. We disagree. Plaintiffs have sued to recover damages for injury to the whole of their land; the apportionment of recovery among the various family members according to their respective interests in the land is of no concern to Pennzoil.[4/] The district court has flexibility in fashioning relief for parties properly joined, Fed.R.Civ.P. 20 (a), and did not abuse his discretion in allowing a so-called "unitary judgment."

Fourth. At trial plaintiffs put on a great deal of evidence tending to show that Pennzoil, in its drilling operations, violated the terms of its oil and gas lease. Upon Pennzoil's motion at the close of all the evidence, the district court ruled that plaintiffs were not entitled to assert the terms of the lease as they were not parties to it and had no interest therein. The court accordingly refused to instruct the jury on the provisions of the lease. We find this ruling to be correct.

The 1904 oil and gas lease executed by A. E. Robertson to Holly Oil Company contained a number of covenants including, inter alea, the following:

> "The Lessors shall have gas for the dwelling from any gas well on said premises free by making connections."

In the 1920 deed to B. P. McKinney, Robertson reserved the oil and gas operating rights,

> "except Gass for domestic use as is set forth in leese."

We think these documents, read together, express the respective parties' intention that the only lease covenant which would inure to the benefit of the surface owners was the "free gas" clause. Therefore, plaintiffs have no standing to assert that Pennzoil has violated any other covenants in the lease; this right inures only to the lessors under that lease.

4/At any event, counsel for plaintiffs informed this court at oral argument, dehors the record, that Charles McKinley's parcel has since been deeded back to Mrs. Justice.

Fifth. Pennzoil assigns as error certain of the district court's evidentiary rulings allowing nonqualified expert witnesses to testify as to damages sustained by plaintiffs, allowing plaintiff Fred McKinney to give opinion testimony as to the value of timber on the land destroyed by Pennzoil, and allowing plaintiffs to put on evidence concerning Pennzoil's failure to obtain their permission prior to conducting drilling activities.

The first argument is without merit. After the challenged witnesses had testified, the court agreed with Pennzoil that they were not properly qualified; he struck their testimony from the record and cautioned the jury to disregard it. We think these actions sufficient to protect Pennzoil from any prejudice.

Fred McKinney's testimony was based on personal knowledge and otherwise met the requirement of Fed.R.Ev. 701. He stated that he had personally measured the timber felled by Pennzoil, and as recently as 1974 had experience in determining the market price of timber. At any event, a landowner's opinion concerning the value of his land is certainly admissible. E.g., West Virginia Department of Highways v. Sickles, 242 S.E.2d 567 (W.Va. 1978). We think the district court properly allowed the testimony.

However, at trial on remand plaintiffs may not testify as to Pennzoil's failure to obtain their permission prior to conducting drilling activities. As surface owners, plaintiffs have no "veto power" over the mineral operator's decision to drill. Testimony concerning failure to obtain permission could raise an inference that Pennzoil has breached a duty to plaintiffs—a duty it does not owe.

Sixth. Finally, Pennzoil assigns as error certain of the district court's procedural rulings allowing plaintiffs to amend their complaint (to add Charles McKinney as party plaintiff) ten days before trial, and granting plaintiffs' last-minute request for jury trial. Both of these rulings were within the sound discretion of the court, Fed.R.Civ.P. 15(a), 39(d), and we do not think he abused his discretion on the facts of this case.[5/]

The verdict of the jury is reversed, a new trial awarded, and the case remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

REVERSED.

[5/]Although submission of the unreasonable use issue to the jury was error, plaintiffs were entitled to have a jury determine the nature and extent of injury to their land and, if the court ruled that Pennzoil's use of the land was unreasonable, to determine proper damages.

BRIEF OF RESPONDENT, PENNZOIL COMPANY, IN OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether in this diversity action the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit is in conflict with the substantive law of the State of West Virginia or decisions of this Court relating to the Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution?

2. Whether the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit abused its discretion by refusing to certify a long-settled question of state property law to the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, pursuant to the Uniform Certification of Questions of Law Act, West Virginia Code 51-1A, as amended?

3. Whether the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit correctly determined the substantive law of the State of West Virginia concerning the alleged damages to petitioners' surface?

4. Whether, in a property damage action plead solely in negligence, the petitioners have any standing to assert that respondent has breached any covenants of a contractual nature contained in the oil and gas lease?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A concise statement of the case, including the development of the case as well as the facts material to the consideration of the questions presented, is contained in the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit (P. App. 1a)[1].

The only material matter not set forth in the opinion below is that the petitioners' complaint, which sounded solely in negligence, did not allege a contractual cause of action (Res. App. A1). In the first paragraph of "STATEMENT" contained in their Petition for Writ of Certiorari, petitioners in fact acknowledge that their cause of action related to injuries to "their land" allegedly caused "by the careless and negligent drilling operations" of respondent (P. 3). The remaining portion of the petitioners' "STATEMENT" contains many erroneous factual allegations, misstatements of facts and self-serving conclusions totally unsupported by references to their Appendix or the record. Respondent makes no attempt to refute these inaccurate allegations, misstatements and conclusions since the material facts are correctly set forth in the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit (P. App. 1a).

ARGUMENT

A. THE OPINION OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT IS NOT IN CONFLICT WITH THE SUBSTANTIVE LAW OF THE STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA OR DECISIONS OF THIS COURT RELATING TO THE SEVENTH AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

Petitioners contend that the decision by the Fourth Circuit is in conflict with this Court's opinion in Byrd v. Blue Ridge Rural Elec. Coop., 356 U.S. 525 (1958), and further that it incorrectly states the substantive law of West Virginia relating to the reasonable use of surface rights by the owner of the oil and gas underlying the surface. An examination of the controlling authority readily discloses that petitioners' argument is totally without merit.

Since the landmark decision of Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938), it has been clear that in diversity cases the substantive law of the local state is the controlling authority in tort actions of this nature. This principle was reaffirmed in Byrd, the very case on which petitioners rely in urging the reversal of the Fourth Circuit. In Byrd, this Court held:

> "It was decided in Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins that the federal courts in diversity cases must respect the definition of state-created rights and obligations by the state courts. We must, therefore, first examine the rule in Adams v. Davison-Paxon Co. to determine whether it is bound up with these rights and obligations in such a way that its application in the federal court is required." [citation omitted] 356 U.S. at 535.

The Fourt Circuit correctly determined that the rule of property law in West Virginia, as enunciated in Adkins v. United Fuel Gas Co., 134 W. Va. 719, 61 S.E. 2d 633 (1950), defines the rights and obligations of vested land interests and, consequently under the Erie doctrine, was not in conflict with the considerations discussed by this Court in Byrd.

In Adkins, the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia held that subsequent to the jury's resolution of all disputed facts, it was the duty of the trial court to determine whether the use of the surface by the operator of the oil and gas rights was a reasonable and necessary one. 134 W. Va. at 724, 61 S.E. 2d at 636. As the Fourth Circuit stated in its decision, Adkins is not in conflict with Byrd inasmuch as all disputed issues of fact are to be resolved by the jury and not by the Court. After the jury has resolved any disputed issues of fact through the use of special interrogatories, the Court would then determine whether the operator had reasonably and fairly used the surface for the enjoyment of its mineral estate under state property law pursuant to the various rights and obligations of the parties. In the event the trial court would determine that the oil and gas operator had unreasonably and unnecessarily used the surface, the jury would then assess damages pursuant to the Court's instruction. (P. App. 5a-6a).

It is clear that all disputed factual issues would be resolved by the jury through the use of special interrogatories under the Adkins doctrine. Then the trial court would be in a position to apply the state property law to the facts as found by the jury. Thus, this allocation of the court and jury functions is not a form or mode of procedure as was the case in Byrd. Rather, it is an integral part of the "state-created rights and obligations" of the parties as defined by the common law of West Virginia. Byrd v. Blue Ridge Rural Elec. Coop., supra at 535. Consequently, the application of the Adkins decision in the instant case is not in conflict with the Byrd doctrine, and petitioners have not been denied their Seventh Amendment right to trial by jury.

Petitioners would have this Court believe that Adkins is not the controlling law of West Virginia relating to the reasonable and necessary use of the surface estate by an oil and gas operator. Rather, petitioners contend that two inapposite cases should be followed by this Court, namely, Johnson v. Junior Pocahontas Coal Co., Inc., 234 S.E. 2d 309 (W. Va. 1977); Mullins v. Beatrice Pocahontas Co., 432 F. 2d 314 (4th Cir. 1970). Mullins was an action for damages caused by a coal company in emitting coal dust from its processing plant. In that decision, the Fourth Circuit was called upon to interpret and construe Virginia substantive law, not the common law of West Virginia. The Fourth Circuit reversed the summary judgment granted by the District Court in favor of the defendant since under Virginia law there were genuine issues of material fact to be resolved by the jury.

Johnson was a civil action wherein the surface owners of land instituted suit against an independent contractor who had been hired to strip mine coal from adjacent property. The Circuit Court of McDowell County, West Virginia, granted the contractor's motion for summary judgment, which was appealed to the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. In reversing the lower Court, the West Virginia Court held that the contractor was not entitled to a summary judgment. In its opinion, the West Virginia Court only referred to the Mullins decision by way of dicta since that case was cited by the appellant-plaintiff.

Thus, it is patently clear that the dicta in Johnson and the interpretation of the Virginia common law in Mullins are not the law of this case. Conversely, this case is controlled by Adkins as properly applied by the Fourth Circuit. Therefore, Petitioners' Petition for Writ of Certiorari should be denied.

B. THE FOURTH CIRCUIT DID NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION IN REFUSING TO CERTIFY A LONG-SETTLED PRINCIPLE OF STATE PROPERTY LAW TO THE SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS OF WEST VIRGINIA.

In support of its argument on the second question presented for review, petitioners argue that Mullins and Johnson are the "leading cases" relating to the reasonable use of the surface by an oil and gas operator. They further state that the action of the Fourth Circuit in applying Adkins rather than Mullins (which construes Virginia law), merits review by this Court. It is beyond comprehension that petitioners can urge this Court to apply Virginia law to the facts of this case in the face of West Virginia substantive law directly on point. The Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia has clearly articulated the applicable law in Adkins. The Fourth Circuit correctly determined that Adkins was the controlling authority, and then properly applied it. Adkins is clearly the prevailing common law in West Virginia. There is no conflict between Adkins and Johnson, which concerns strip mining and the attendant problem of the emission of coal dust. Therefore, there is no merit to petitioners' argument that this issue should be certified to the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.

It has been held by the Fifth Circuit that questions of state law ought not to be certified if the answer is reasonably clear. Florida ex rel Shevin v. Exxon Corp., 526 F. 2d 266 (5th Cir. 1976). The only reason to certify a question is to ascertain what the state law is, and not, when the state has already articulated the law, to afford a party the opportunity to persuade the state court to change it. In Tarr v. Manchester Ins. Corp., 544 F. 2d 14 (1st Cir. 1976), the First Circuit held that Erie requires any federal court sitting in diversity to apply state law when it is clearly enunciated. A federal court should not participate in an effort to change state law through the certification process. Not only is the law reasonably clear in West Virginia, it is patently clear as articulated in Adkins. In applying Adkins, the Fourth Circuit did not make an "Erie educated guess" as to the prevailing state law. Rather than a conjectural conclusion, the Fourth Circuit's application of Adkins was based on long-settled precedent.

It should be noted that petitioners first raised the certification issue in their Petition for Rehearing filed after the Fourth Circuit rendered its opinion reversing the judgment entered by the District Court (Res. App. 4a). The certification issue was not raised in the District Court, nor in briefs or oral argument in the Fourth Circuit until after petitioners received the Fourth Circuit's adverse decision. Only then did they make their belatedly weak attempt to cloud this litigation by raising the certification issue, and citing nonauthoritative law in support of their position.

Thus, the Petition for Writ of Certiorari should be denied since it would be a useless act to certify a question to the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia when there is no conflict in the law of West Virginia as applied by the Fourth Circuit. It is obvious that petitioners' only reason for asserting this issue at this late date is to be given the opportunity to persuade the West Virginia Court to change the prevailing substantive law of the state.

C. THE FOURTH CIRCUIT CORRECTLY DETERMINED THE SUBSTANTIVE LAW OF WEST VIRGINIA IN CONNECTION WITH THE ALLEGED DAMAGES TO PETITIONERS' SURFACE.

The third issue raised by petitioners in urging this Court to grant their Petition for Writ of Certiorari to the Fourth Circuit is that the Fourth Circuit should have applied federal or Virginia law rather than the applicable West Virginia law. Initially, it should be noted that petitioners in their argument quote a portion of the opinion rendered by the Fourth Circuit out of context (P. 9, P. App. 6a). Nevertheless, the Fourth Circuit correctly held that: "There was almost no evidence, however, reasonably specifying the cost to repair the damage or the monetary devaluation of the land, as the district court struck most of the plaintiff's' expert witness testimony from the record." (P. App. 6a).

Once again, petitioners urge this Court to adopt the principle that federal law, as well as Virginia common law, should be dispositive of the issue of damages rather than the established common law of West Virginia. Petitioners' position is in direct conflict with and contradictory to Erie.

The Fourth Circuit correctly determined and then applied the prevailing West Virginia law on the issue of damages. The decisions of this Court cited by petitioners are obviously good authority in anti-trust litigation as well as cases arising under the Fair Labor Standards Act. These matters are clearly federal questions and properly determined by standards set forth in those opinions. Such is not the case in this diversity action applying West Virginia property law.

Respondent respectfully submits that this Court should deny the petitioners' Petition for Writ of Certiorari with respect to the third issue presented for review as this issue is totally void of any merit.

D. THE PETITIONERS, IN THIS PROPERTY DAMAGE ACTION PLEAD SOLELY IN NEGLIGENCE, HAVE NO STANDING TO ASSERT THAT RESPONDENT HAS BREACHED ANY COVENANTS OF A CONTRACTUAL NATURE, WHICH COVENANTS ARE CONTAINED IN THE OIL AND GAS LEASE.

Petitioners urge this Court to grant their Petition for Writ of Certiorari on the basis that there was "reversible error committed both by the District Court and the Circuit Court regarding an instruction to the jury on the application of certain covenants in the lease under which respondent obtained their property rights." (P. 10, P. App. 14a).

Respondent respectfully submits that petitioners have no standing whatsoever to assert that it has breached any contractual covenants contained in the oil and gas lease for the following reasons:

1. Petitioners did not plead a contractual cause of action in their complaint, which only alleged negligence (Res. App. A1).

2. Petitioners did not offer to the trial court a proposed charge to the jury on any contractual issue (Res. App. 6a-8a).

3. The Fourth Circuit correctly determined and applied the substantive law of the State of West Virginia on this issue.

1. Petitioners did not plead a contractural cause of action in their complaint, which only alleged negligence.

Despite the fact that the petitioners failed to allege any breach of contract in their complaint, they presented testimony to the jury, over respondent's objections, concerning alleged violations of the lease provisions. At the conclusion of the evidence, the District Judge, in chambers, ruled that he would not instruct the jury on this issue (Res. App. 9a). However, he failed to instruct the jury to disregard the evidence improperly admitted in this regard, thereby prejudicing respondent. Respondent submits that since petitioners failed to allege a breach of contract, they should not be permitted to assert such a claim in this Court.

2. Petitioners did not offer to the trial court a proposed charge to the jury on any contractual issue.

Petitioners are precluded from asserting the alleged breach of contract since they failed to request an instruction on this issue by the Court as required by Rule 51 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (Res. App. 10a). At the trial court level, petitioners requested that only three instructions be given to the jury, none of which dealt with the fourth issue raised by the petitioners in their Petition for Writ of Certiorari (Res. App. 6a-8a). Although counsel for petitioners objected on the record to the Court's charge to the extent that it did not encompass petitioners' proffered instructions, this objection did not save any grounds for appeal due to the failure of petitioners to request any instructions on the alleged breach of contract (Res. App. 9a). It is hornbook law that a party cannot assign as error the failure of a court to instruct the jury on an issue when that same party makes no written request for such an instruction pursuant to Rule 51 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Cowan v. Fulton, 407 F. 2d 93 (4th Cir. 1969); Gentry v. Louisville and N. R. Co., 371 F. 2d 829 (6th Cir. 1967); Ostapenko v. American Bridge Div. of U. S. Steel Corp., 267 F. 2d 204 (2nd Cir. 1959); Worden v. Courtemanche, 415 F. 2d 349 (2d Cir. 1969).

Therefore, petitioners cannot now complain of any error by the District Court in its failure to instruct the jury on this issue.

3. The Fourth Circuit correctly determined and applied the substantive law of the State of West Virginia on this issue.

In their Petition for Writ of Certiorari, petitioners quote the Fourth Circuit out of context in relation to the alleged violation of the terms of the lease (P. 10, P. App. 8a). This evidence was objected to by respondent on the grounds that it was irrelevant to this action since the lease provisions did not inure to the benefit of the petitioners. When one examines the rights and obligations of the parties to this litigation, the oil and gas lease of 1904 must be read together with the 1920 severance deed from A. E. Robertson to B. P. McKinney wherein the surface of the land was conveyed to petitioners' predecessors in title subject to the reservation of the oil and gas and the right to operate the same by A. E. Robertson (Res. App. 11a).

The District Court and the Fourth Circuit correctly determined and applied the substantive law of West Virginia on this issue. Petitioners were not third party beneficiaries to the lease and no rights under the lease inured to their benefit. The Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia in Ison vs. Daniel Crisp Corp., 146 W. Va. 786, 122 S. E. 2d 553 (1961), held that in the absence of a provision in a contract specifically stating that the contract will inure to the benefit of a third party, there is a strong presumption that parties did not so intend for the contract to benefit the third person. In order to overcome that presumption, the implication from the contract as a whole must be so strong as to practically amount to an express declaration. Thus a contract which is executed for the benefit of a third party must have the consent of all parties to the contract.

In setting forth the "relevant conditions" of the oil and gas lease in their Petition (P. 10-11), petitioners neglected to set forth the one convenant which expresses the intent of the parties, namely:

> "The Lessors shall have gas for the dwelling from any gas well on said premises free by making connections." (P. App. 15a)

In the severance deed, A. E. Robertson reserved the oil and gas and the right to operate the same. However, in that same reservation the free gas for domestic use was conveyed to B. P. McKinney (Res. App. 12a). Since A. E. Robertson expressly declared that the free gas covenant was to be for the benefit of B. P. McKinney, the converse would apply with respect to the remaining covenants in the oil and gas lease and they would not inure to the benefit of the petitioners.

When the rationale of Ison is applied to the Robertson oil and gas lease and the 1920 severance deed, it is readily apparent that the covenants of the lease were not meant to inure to the benefit of petitioners. Further, had respondent executed a new lease containing no provisions similar to those in the 1904 lease, petitioners would have no cause of action.

Before a covenant is a real covenant which runs with the land, there must be privity of estate between the parties. Hurxthal v. St. Lawrence Boom & Lumber Co., 53 W. Va. 87, 44 S.E. 520 (1903).

In Hurxthal, plaintiff's predecessor in title was owner of a flour and grist mill which was located on Greenbrier River. Defendant who owned a saw mill also located on the river, entered into an agreement with plaintiff's predecessor in title whereby defendant agreed to maintain two dams on the river, and to prevent the accumulation of trash in the mill race. Plaintiff, successor in title to the individual who entered into the agreement with defendant, instituted an action based on breach of covenant alleging that defendant failed to maintain the dams. An issue before the court was whether the covenants were real covenants running with the land, or merely covenants personal to the individual who executed the agreement with defendant. The Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia held:

> "It is not sufficient that the covenant is concerning land, but to make it run with the land there must be a privity of estate between the parties, and the covenant must have relation to an interest created or conveyed, in order that the covenant may pass to the grantee of the covenantee." 53 W. Va. at 92, 44 S.E. at 522.

The West Virginia Court went on to hold that the covenant contained in the agreement was a personal covenant since the defendant conveyed no interest in the mill, but made a personal obligation which affected the mill. The covenant lacked the one essential element, namely, privity of estate, which would have made it a real covenant running with the land. Consequently, it did not inure to the benefit of the plaintiff. There was a provision in the agreement which gave the assignees of Ben Hurxthal the right to continue the agreement for an additional five years. By reason of this provision, the West Virginia Court went on to hold that plantiff could maintain a suit for any breach of covenant which occurred during the five years she owned the property, since she had continued the agreement.

In the instant case, the covenants in the oil and gas lease obviously affect the surface of the land. As in Hurxthal, there was no interest in the surface conveyed by the 1904 lease. The lessee merely made a personal convenant. Since privity of estate is lacking between the parties to this litigation, the covenants contained in the 1904 lease did not run with the land and do not inure to the benefit of petitioners.

With the exception of Hurxthal, the West Virginia cases cited by petitioners are not relevant to this issue. Since there is established West Virginia law supporting respondent's position, petitioners' citations to authority of other states are without merit. Both the District Court and the Fourth Circuit were correct in their application of the common law of West Virginia to this issue. Therefore, the petitioners' Petition for Writ of Certiorari should be denied.

CONCLUSION

Respondent respectfully urges this Court to deny the petitioners' Petition for Writ of Certiorari for reason that the opinion of the Fourth Circuit correctly states the substantive law of the State of West Virginia on each question presented for review and for further reason that the Fourth Circuit's opinion is not in conflict with any decision of this Court.

COMPLAINT:

I.

That the plaintiffs are residents of Kanawha and Lincoln County, West Virginia; that the defendant is and was at all times hereinafter stated, a corporation, organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, doing business in Lincoln County, West Virginia, and that this Court has jurisdiction of this cause.

II.

That plaintiffs were at the times hereinafter stated the owners and in possession of the following described real estate, situate in Lincoln County, to-wit:

> All that certain tract of land situate in Duval District, Lincoln County, State of West Virginia, on the waters of Joes Creek of Trace Fork of Mud River bounded substantially as follows:
> On the north by lands of Sarah Alford; on the east by lands of Morris Dunlap; on the south by lands of Nonay McCoy; on the west by lands of J. W. Lipscomb, containing 96 acres, more or less, reserving, however, therefrom 300 feet around the buildings on which no well shall be drilled by either party except by mutual consent.

III.

That the defendant owns and operates an oil and gas lease on the above described land and in developing said lease has drilled numerous wells on said premises on which it is producing a quantity of oil and a large amount of salt water, sediments, and other poisonous and deleterious substances, which have been permitted to excape and flow on and across the surface of said land into small streams and into the low places causing the damage hereinafter set out.

IV.

That the defendant permitted salt water to excape from a pit located on the up-land and flow down and across plaintiffs land, completely destroying the fertility of the soil.

V.

That the defendant by the use of a bulldozer build roads over the bottom land, elevated the roads by taking dirt from either side thereof, thus preventing the water from flowing off of the premises, and collecting the water on the premises in the low places where the soil has been taken out for the purpose of building roads and as a result a large portion of the plantiffs farm has been rendered useless and valueless for farming or cultivation; that all of the soil in the bottom-land which has not been destroyed by salt water, as hereinafter set out, has been made valueless by reason of said operation of the defendant.

VI.

That the damage above referred to was caused by the negligence of the defendant in operating the leases, in permitting salt water to excape and flow on or across the premises as set out and in building roads and highways across the premises as set out, and by reason of said negligent acts, the value of the surface of plaintiffs' farm has been depreciated in the sum of $50,000.00.

VII.

Plaintiffs further allege that said acts on the part of the defendant as hereinabove set forth was done maliciously and wilfully.

WHEREFORE, premises considered, plaintiffs pray judgment against the defendant, in the sum of $50,000.00 as compensatory damages and in the sum of $50,000.00 as punitive damages and the costs of this action.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether this Court in its decision of May 21, 1979, was correct in ruling that the District Court, sitting as a diversity court in West Virginia in this case, was bound by the West Virginia rule of Adkins v. United Fuel Gas Co., 134 W. Va. 719, 61 S.E. 2d 633 (1950); and whether appellee-surface owners' constitutional rights, under the Seventh Amendment of the United States Constitution, were violated?

2. Whether the Court, in its decision of May 21, 1979, correctly ruled that appellees-surface owners have no standing to assert any lease covenants other than the "free gas" clause?

3. Whether this Court should certify the question of reasonable necessity and the question of appellees' standing to assert violations of certain lease covenants to the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia under the Uniform Certification of Questions of Law Act, W. Va. Code, § 51-1A-1, et seq.?

JURY CHARGE

1. If you find defendant drilled for oil by methods not permitted by lease, then you must find defendant liable for any and all damage resulting from such methods.

2. If you find defendant used the surface in such manner as was not fairly necessary for the extraction of oil, then you must find defendant liable for any and all damage resulting from such surface use.

3. If you find plaintiff's home is not on the 96 acre tract known as the A. E. Robertson tract, and you find that defendant's wells on the Robertson tract unreasonably interfered with plaintiff's use and enjoyment of their home, then you must find defendant liable to plaintiffs for defendant's interference with plaintiff's use and enjoyment of their home.

EXCERPT FROM TRIAL RECORD — DISCUSSION BY COURT AND COUNSEL IN THE COURT'S CHAMBERS CONCERNING PROPOSED INSTRUCTIONS REQUESTED BY PETITIONERS

THE COURT: All right.

The question here of the amendment of the complaint at this late date is likewise one that the Court has to deny.

I have a proposed jury charge from the plaintiff in this case which defined the issues from the plaintiffs' standpoint — "And we would propose that one, two, three — in a document submitted to the Court in about the last week and a half, and I assume that these were the issues that the plaintiffs were going forward with when they came to trial. Is that not correct, Mr. Cohen?

MR. COHEN: I can't find my copy. I thought I put "nuisance" as one of the jury instructions — when I submitted, around August 20th, when I submitted my portion of the pre-trial order to the defendants, I think I put "nuisance" in as one of my instructions.

But so far as that goes, the facts on this which we are basing our claim of nuisance is exactly the same facts that constitute unreasonable use. So there can't be any prejudice to the defendants in allowing us to show that they dumped dirt and uncovered rocks and timber over the hillside from Well No. 5. They knew we were going to bring that up to support our unreasonable use claim.

And we are also arguing that constitutes nuisance. The facts are the same. There cannot be any harm to them.

THE COURT: Except you have a new legal issue in that case that wasn't in the case previously.

MR. COHEN: Well, it was in the case of August 22nd.

MR. TRAINER: No, not by the jury charge that you submitted to our office. You had three — one, two, three. That was it. Would you like to take a look at it? You are welcome to it.

MR. COHEN: All right.

If you find the defendant's wells on the Robinson tract unreasonably interfered with plaintiffs' use and enjoyment of their home, then you must find the defendant liable for payment for defendant's interference with plaintiffs' enjoyment — nuisance is unreasonable interference with use and enjoyment of your property. Instead of using the term I used the definition. But if the defendants don't recognize the definition of nuisance then I don't think because of their ignorance they're entitled to keep it out.

MR. DAVIS: We recognize the allegations contained in the complaint, Mr. Cohen.

MR. TRAINER: You had one chance to amend the complaint by adding additional parties.

MR. COHEN: We did even after we submitted that to you.

MR. DAVIS: You made no attempt to amend the complaint with respect to the allegation of nuisance or damages to the home or anything of that nature.

MR. KAUFMAN: We feel the substance of that charge has made clear to the defense long before now, your Honor, and we ask leave to go forward and prove these facts.

MR. DAVIS: I am not clear about one thing. Where are we insofar as the house is concerned — just wait and see what comes out in the evidence?

EXCERPT FROM TRIAL RECORD — RULING BY THE DISTRICT COURT AT CONCLUSION OF EVIDENCE RELATING TO BREACH OF CONTRACT ISSUE.

THE COURT: Well, I am going to deny your motion for a directed verdict, and I'm going to submit the case to the jury on the question of whether or not there was negligence in the operation of the surface in relation to the drilling and production; and, secondly, whether or not there was an unreasonable use of the land in relation to the authorized drilling operations.

I am not going to instruct on punitive damages because the evidence does not support it.

And, secondly, I am not going to instruct on the breach of the provisions of the lease. I had given an indication to the contrary at the close of the plaintiffs' evidence, but I have reconsidered on this. And I find that there is no privity of the state here, nor is there any privity of the contract which would allow breach of the provisions of the lease to be asserted.

And I will go forward and tell you what I will instruct on.

MR. KAUFMAN: May we have a few moments to discuss that point, your Honor?

(Discussion off the record.)

MR. KAUFMAN: Let the record show our objection to that ruling.

THE COURT: All right.

RULE 51. INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY: OBJECTION

At the close of the evidence or at such earlier time during the trial as the court reasonably directs, any party may file written requests that the court instruct the jury on the law as set forth in the requests. The court shall inform counsel of its proposed action upon the requests prior to their arguments to the jury, but the court shall instruct the jury after the arguments are completed. No party may assign as error the giving or the failure to give an instruction unless he objects thereto before the jury retires to consider its verdict, stating distinctly the matter to which he objects and the grounds of his objection. Opportunity shall be given to make the objection out of the hearing of the jury.
